	Kenting National Park, the unique national park of Taiwan, is the only one that has an ocean environment. It is actually the tip of the Hengchuen Peninsulathe southernmost part of Taiwan Island and its only tropical zone region. With its ample rainfall and diverse topography, there is a wide variety of flora and fauna.
	Nearly 300 species of birds take advantage of both its open areas and dense forests; 216 kinds of butterflies flutter in a number of habitats; 27 kinds of reptiles and many species of small mammals scurry across fields and primitive forests. The 18083.50 hectares of inland area include such diverse features as picturesque hills and small lakes, thickets, prairie, and even a small desert, each with its own unique beauty.
